

TRAPPED BY FIRE, EIGHT WERE LOST.

Mrs. Anna Horowitz Was Burned to Death on Fire-Escape, a Crowd Looking On.

Charles Fass Threw His Four-Year-Old Daughter Out of a Window to Save Her Life.

DEATH OF MRS. HOROWITZ

DEATH OF MRS. HOROWITZ

Policemen Peter Hunt and Fitzgerald, of the Elbridge street station, who sent in alarms from two different points.

Charles Fass, who keeps a small shop on the ground floor, occupied the apartment over his store.

Faced the Flames.

In the apartments with him were his wife, Sarah, his four children, Samuel, Lena, Morris and Pauline, and Mrs. Anna Horowitz.

A policeman Hunt got to the house he saw Fass at the window. He and his wife slept in the front room with the two-year-old son Morris and the four-year-old daughter Pauline, and he had been aroused to find the place filled with smoke and flames roaring beneath.

Saved Her Sisters.

In an extension from the ground floor rear lived Abraham Greenberg, his wife and five children, and Frank Clarisa, his wife and two children. They were cut off by the flames in front and climbed on the roof of the extension.

Mrs. Anna Horowitz was entrapped and unable to watch her suffering. In a short time she was overcome and fell to the grained floor of the fire-escape. Her screams had died to moans that were awful. It was still impossible to reach her and she turned to death while hundreds looked on.

Meanwhile flames and smoke were sweeping through the Fass apartments. No one appeared at the windows and it was plain that all had fallen victims.
